

Copyright and Reproductions

for USF Libraries – Tampa Special Collections

Many of the collections and individual items in Special Collections may be protected by copyright law (Title 17, United States Code). Special Collections staff cannot offer legal guidance or assistance in obtaining permission to publish copyrighted material. We will, however, be happy to help locate appropriate contact information when possible.

Materials published 96 or more years ago may be in the public domain, or no longer protected by copyright law, in the United States. Special Collections claims no intellectual property ownership rights over these materials or photographs and scans made of these materials. If reproducing material obtained through Special Collections we do request that you cite the Tampa Library's Special Collections as the holding institution. The citation for Special Collections materials is: [Item], Special Collections, Tampa Library, University of South Florida.

It is the responsibility of the user to observe applicable copyright laws as well as any applicable exemptions. If a researcher makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction of a copyrighted work for purposes in excess of “fair use,” that researcher may be liable for copyright infringement. For general information about copyright, fair use, and determining the copyright status of a work, please consult the library's Copyright Guide:

<http://guides.lib.usf.edu/copyright>.

Patrons will defend, indemnify, and hold harmless the Tampa Library Special Collections, University of South Florida Libraries, University of South Florida, its board of regents, its officers, employees, and agents against all claims, demands, costs, and expenses, including attorneys' fees incurred by copyright infringement or any other legal or regulatory cause of action arising from the use of Tampa Library Special Collections materials.